TEACHING TYPING SKILLS SINCE 1995

Upsurge in online learning fuels increasing need for touch typing skills.

For the first time the computer has becoming the main medium for delivering learning.

Many learners enjoy using resources online but the majority are not trained, equipped or used to producing their work in this way.

Most students are trained to handwrite but not to use a keyboard efficiently. Their keying in skills are poor and many are slow and inaccurate. When you think of how many hours schools spend teaching handwriting, it is quite astounding that they cannot allocate just 90 minutes to teach the basics of touch typing, which is all it takes with KAZ, our Accelerated Learning cloud-based program.

Of course, there are free programs available but when pupils are learning online, schools need to be sure that students and their data are safe and not being spammed, as can be the case with free software. Our website and all our courses are secure. We are members of ICO.org and strictly adhere to their rules and regulations. We guarantee no pop-ups, no advertising and no solicitation by email.

KAZ Update

Individuals - With home working now the normal for many, there has never been a better time to upskill and learn the skill of touch typing. Learning takes as little as just 90 minutes.

Read the blog (see website: Can you spare 90 minutes?), proving how you can save upto a year of your life by learning how to touch type. The KAZ Accelerated Learning typing course is research based, scientifically structured, tried, tested and proven by the Open university and is the only typing tutor available on the UK's Learndirect and Opensesame in the US.

Education - With school closures upon us and online learning key to delivering education to our children, is it really an option to have children sitting for hours at their computer typing with just 2 fingers? Schools are now recognising the need to prepare students with typing skills for academia and the workplace. In an effort to help during this turbulent time, we are offering a 50% discount on all Schools Online licences, so students can learn from home or anywhere they have an internet signal. All editions include our new SEN/Dyslexia
